HOPE.

Through night to light in every stage,
From childhood's morn to hoary age, What shall illumine the pilgrimage By mortal tread?
There is a pure and heavenly ray That brightest shines in darkest day, When earthly beams are passed away,
'Tis light by God.

This heavenly ray of radiant light Comes down from yonder dreamy height, And e'en in the darkest night Cheers up the soul of man:
It cheers him on in his career,
And in the darkest hour of fear This heavenly ray is always near, Cheering the mind again.

This heavenly ray is always pure, It cheers up every mind, and your Deep sorrowful thoughts 'twill always cure, If you'll but look on high.
It shines in the darkest days,
Its brightest and refulgent rays,
And when cast down by mournful lays,
O, then 'tis always nigh.

This heavenly light that cheers our way,
And lights our pathway every day,
And turns our grief into a lay, Ye call it shining Hope.
Then when by grief, then thou art stricken,
And when thy thoughts begin to thicken, Until thy mind hath ceased to quicken, In sorrow dost not grope.

But turn to Hope that glowing star That still shines from afar,
And it will cheer thy weary ear With bright and joyful lays.
Then turn to Hope and cheer thy way,
And banish sorrow every day,
And make each hour a happy day, Till death shall come to stay.

Secret Story.

A KENTUCKY ANECDOTE.

It was customary in former days for all the ladies of the best families to attend the prominent barbers; and this was especially the case in the contest between Mr.
Brockbridge and Gen. Combs, in 1840.
Out of those affairs grew the authentic story of the niece widow in the blue grass region. Not far from the forks of Elkhorn lived the pretty little widow Fauntleroy, and one of her nearest neighbors was General Peyton. The General had looked upon the little widow very much as he looked upon his blooded horse Powhatan—"The finest horse, sir, in the blue grass region."

The pretty Mrs. Fauntleroy had been a widow more than a year; while the General, having a great regard for etiquette, had waited patiently for that time to elope, in order to declare himself. But the widow, with her woman's art, kept her lover at bay, and yet kept him in her train.

He had escorted her to a barbeque, and when returning had expressed his satisfaction at the prospects of General Combs, and at the success of the Whig party.

The widow took sides with Democracy, and offered to wager her blooded horse, Gypsy, or anything on her place, against Powhatan, or anything else she might fancy on the General's place.

The General's gallantry would not allow him to refuse the wager, which he promptly accepted. By this time they had reached the North Fork of Elkhorn, and were about to ford it (bridges were not plenty in those days) when John Peyton, the General's only son and heir, came up at a sharp gallop behind them.

The widow turned and bowed to John, and rode on into the stream, but a little behind her companion. The east bank was very steep, and required the horses to put forth nearly all their strength to reach the top with their loads.

As luck would have it, good or ill, the widow's girth broke when just at the commencement of the steep part. The lady still seated on her saddle, slid swiftly back into the water, while the horse went up the bank like an arrow.

John Peyton leaped from his horse, and in an instant caught the floating lady and saddle, and, before the General had recovered from his astonishment, was at the top of the bank with his burden.

The little widow was equal to the occasion, for she begged the General to ride on to stop her horse, which had now begun to understand his part in the mishap, and was beginning to increase his gate toward home.

The General did as he was bid, and soon returned with her horse. In the meantime John Peyton had secured his own horse, and when the General came back with the widow's horse she and John were laughing merrily over the ridiculous accident, but what further passed between them is only known to themselves.

John Peyton repaired the broken girth and fastened the saddle again on the widow's horse, and rode on to his home, leaving the General to follow with the widow's horse.

After having changed her wet clothing, the pretty widow entertained her guest with her bright smiles and some new songs.
The General was delighted, and expressed his delight as Kentucky gentlemen of that day would do: "You are the finest songstress, madame, of the blue grass region."

When he bid her good night and shook hands with her on the porch, the wicked little widow gave him a little squeeze; only a little, but it thrilled him an electric shock through his great, ponderous frame, while she laughingly reminded him of his wager. That night, in his dreams, the little widow Fauntleroy was repeated so often and in so many bewitching forms, that he resolved to propose to her at their first meeting, nor did he dream that he could be refused.

The next morning a letter from his tobacco factor called General Peyton to Louisville, and before his return the political contest in the Ashland district was over; and, wonderful to relate, John C.
Breckinridge, the young Democrat, was elected to Congress.

General Peyton was both astonished and indignant. "Mr. Clay's district," sir, the finest Congressional district in the blue grass region, has disgraced itself.
To his son John he communicated his intention of bringing Mrs. Fauntleroy to adorn the head of his table.

"Sir, she is the finest lady in the blue grass region, and I hope, sir, you will always respect your future mother."

John, with a quiet smile, assured him he was pleased with his choice. This pleased the General highly, for he had been a little afraid John would object to a stepmother younger than himself.

The next morning the General ordered Powhatan brought out, and led over to Mrs. Fauntleroy's. Calling John, he requested him to call upon Mrs. Fauntleroy.

"The Whig party has disgraced itself," in Mr. Clay's district, sir, and I am compelled to part with the finest blooded horse in the State to pay my wager with that lady sir."

The black boy had led Powhatan to the hitching rail in front of Mrs. Faunteroy's yard, and having told him, had gone into the quarters to tell his colored brothers and sisters of their mistress's great good luck in having won the famous horse Powhatan.

When General Peyton and John arrived they found the pretty widow and two young lady friends in the yard admiring Powhatan.

"Madam," said the General to Mrs.
Fauntleroy, "I have come like a true Kentucky gentleman, to pay the wager I have lost. Powhatan, madam, is rightfully yours."

"But, General, I believe the wager was conditional. It was the horse or anything else on the place, was it not?"
"Madam, you are correct; but I cannot permit you to select an inferior animal."

"You have another and superior animal here," replied the widow, blushing.
"Young John, if he would but use his tongue. I think I shall choose him."

The General roared, and in his blundering manner, bade the ladies good morning to John he said:

"Sir, you will remain." Genl. Peyton never forgave his daughter-in-law her practical joke. In after years he used to say:

grass region, but she lacks taste sir."

The City of Venice.
Venice is a compact city, about seven miles in circuit, and perfectly accessible in all its parts. Its principal buildings are of marble or of light colored stone, and the remainder are of brick covered with stucco. Great care is taken of the streets. They are swept clean daily, and so well cared for that there are but a few places in Venice where the air is not sweet and pure—which is more than can be said of most large cities. It is doubtful whether the Venetians would have made broad streets, for climate reasons, if they could have afforded the room. During a large part of the year the rays of the sun are too powerful to walk with safety in their glare.
The people gather in the squares and market-places, or lounge upon the quays.
In this land of sunshine and cheap polenta the smallest amount of industry affords a subsistence. What should be a blessing to the people is an actual detriment under a land system now prevalent in Italy, as iniquitous in principle as it is destructive of national prosperity, because it removes all stimulus to industry. The walls of the canals are usually of blocks of granite, laid in courses, upon which the buildings along the canal rise as their immediate foundations. The passenger in a gondola finds himself between parallel rows of houses rising from the water three, four, and five stories high, with windows upon the canal the same as a street, and with front door opening upon a flight of stone steps descending into the water. These canals are from ten to thirty feet wide, with an average width not exceeding fifteen feet. They are short, and often crooked, but all alike are swept out daily by the tides, which keep the water pure and clean. It is in virtue of the salt water and the tide that Venice is habitable as well as healthy. There is not, probably, a acre of land within its limits not touched by some one of these canals. They may be likened to the streets of a medieval city which run wherever a street was supposed to be necessary, without regard to width or curvature.

An unreasonable and somewhat misanthropic acquaintance remarks he has often heard the proverb, "A friend in need is a friend indeed," but he says he can't see any point in it. He has a friend in need who is always borrowing money of him.

Opinion is the main thing which does good or harm in the world. It is our false opinions of things which ruin us.

Brilliant ideas are like shirt buttons, they are always off when we are in a hurry.

Popular Miscellany.

How Long Branch was Settled.

Long Branch takes its name from a brook, a branch of the South Shrewsbury River which runs in a direct line northward with the coast. It is of little use except for gathering ice for the hotels and cottages. Tradition points to an Indian fishery established in 1733, as the first occupation of this place, which was styled at that time "Land'r Eden." The Indian encampment was fixed near the spot now occupied by the Clarendon Hotel.

A legend tells us that in those early times four men named Slocum, Parker, Wardell and Hulett came from Rhode Island in quest of land. They found the Indians friendly but not disposed to sell. It was proposed by the Yankees that a wrestling match should be made up between one Indian and one of the whites, to be decided by the best two in three rounds.

If the champion of the white men won, they were to have as much land as a man could walk around in a day. If otherwise they were to leave peacefully. John Slocum was selected for the struggle—a man of giant proportions, athletic and of great strength, courage and inflexibility of purpose. Great preparation was made to witness the encounter. The chosen Indian wrestler practiced continually for the event. The day long expected proved cloudless and auspicious. The spot chosen was the present "Fish Landing."

A circle was formed and the Indian champion, clad, confident and greased from head to foot, appeared. Slocum advanced coolly and the struggle began. It was long and doubtful, but at last Slocum, inured to toil, hardy and rugged, proved too much for the Indian and threw him, to the intense disappointment of the Indians and the undisputed joy of the whites. The terms were then all arranged.
John Slocum had two brothers and they occupied that part of Long Branch reaching from the shore to Turtle Mill Brook.

What to do in Case of Accidents.
Professor Wilder, of Cornell University, gives these short rules for action in cases of accident. It would not be a bad thing to put them out and carry them in one's pocket-book or, better yet, commit them to memory.

For dust in the eyes, avoid rubbing; dash water into them; remove clinders, etc., with the round point of a lead pencil.

Remove insects from the ear by tepid water, never put a hard instrument into the ear.

If any artery is cut, compress above the wound; if a vein is cut compress below.

If choked, get upon all fours and cough.

For slight burns, dip the part in cold water; if the skin is destroyed, cover with vasoline.

Smother a fire with carpets, etc.; water will often spread burning oil, and increase danger. Before passing through smoke, take a full breath and then stoop low, but if carbon is suspected, walk erect.

Suck poisoned wounds, unless your mouth is sore; enlarge the wound, or, better, cut out the part without delay; hold the wounded part as long as can be borne to a hot coal, or end of a cigar.

In case of poisoning, excite vomiting by tickling the throat with warm water and mustard.

For acid poisons give alkalies; for alkaline poisons, give acids; white of egg is good in most cases; in case of opium poisoning, give strong coffee, and keep moving.

If in water, float on the back, with the nose and mouth projecting.

For apoplexy, raise the head and body; for fainting, lay flat.

Touching Letter.—It is said that the following letter was written to a lady in New York by a bereaved stricken widow in Cincinnati: Dearest Louisa: Darling John died last night. Congestion of the lungs. Our loss is his gain. I will join him on the other shore. I have ordered
